A Romantic Love Affair.
A young man named Henry Brethardt, aged twenty-two, who had been an employee sometimes along the line of the N. P., met at St.
Paul, last summer, Susie P. Englebrecht, a girl of fifteen, a daughter of a German settler living near Kettle River, and an intimacy sprung up between them. They correspond for a while, but one of Henry's letters, happening to fall into the hands of Susie's brother, Wilhelm, there was a big explosion on the part of her father and mother, who in strong language denounced the cunning lover, and informed her that the thing must be stopped at once. And, as they thought, it was. A few months later, however, Susie was missed from the breakfast table, and on searching her room it was ascertained that she had not been in her bed, and that her wardrobe had gone with her. There was now real alarm in the family, and the brother was sent to look for the lost girl. He wandered about for a number of days without finding his missing sister, nor was she heard from until a few weeks ago, when a lumberman informed the family there was a young couple living in a newly-built log cabin on Kettle River, some five or six miles above its entrance into the St. Croix.

From this lumberman's description of the pair, the family were satisfied it was Susie and her lover, and the father and brother resolved to pay them a visit. This they did the following day, and were surprised to find the runaway pair living comfortably, but occupying separate rooms. The cabin, though small, was divided into two apartments, and furnished comfortably. On asking why there were two rooms, Brethardt said they were not wedded yet, and that he had respected his intended tough to show her his designs were honorable.
The reason the wedding knot had not been tied, was owing to the circumstance that the minister who was to marry them had failed to come to their home as he had promised to do, and Susie being under age, was afraid to leave the house to get married, lest her parents should capture and send her to some Cincinnati reformatory, which was something she much deplored. Thus, they were forced to live under one roof, but did so virtuously. After some persuasion on the part of the girl's brother, who instantly recognized the true gentleman in Brethardt, the old man "caved in" and gave his consent to the union of the lovers. It was then resolved that the marriage should take place the following Sunday at Susie's home.

In conversing with the forgiven lover, Mr.
Englebrecht ascertained that Susie, after the discovery of their secret correspondence, had managed to get a letter to her intended, who, having previously selected a quarter section of land, went to work and put up his cabin and furnished it. When all was ready he "went for" Susie, and she, being apprised that the minister to unite them was to be on hand at their future home in the wilds, journeyed, aboard a temporary sled Henry had provided, and was drawn by him some eight miles to their forest residence. On arriving there, the minister not being on hand, she wept bitterly and wanted to go back, but Henry assuaged her grief and proposed the separate-room business, to which she assented.

The pair were duly married at the residence of the girl's parents on the following Sunday, and now they, as well as their connections, are happy.
There is a good deal of romance in this little affair; but when the reader understands that our hero drew for over eleven miles, on a snow-sled, the boards which divided his room from that of the girl, he has since made his wife, a principle of purity of heart and homeliness that sparkles diamond-like, and makes the matter almost sublime. We doubt if there is another such example of "love in the bush" on record.—Philadelphia North American.

TRAINED NURSES.—None of the provisions of Mr. Johns Hopkins' great charity to this city exhibit a wiser forethought than that for the establishment of a training school for nurses in connection with his noble hospital. The new movement in favor of trained nurses has been one of most rapid growth. It has appealed especially to the ready hands and tender hearts of women. Led by the Princess Alice in Germany, with simple means and indefatigable perseverance, fostered and strengthened in England by the heroic example, and strong, cheering and appreciative words of that pure and noble Christian gentleman, Florence Nightingale, the seed that was sown but yesterday already is springing up to the harvest.
At Kew-street and at St. Thomas Hospital; at the Princess Alice Home of Darmstadt, and at the Liverpool Workhouse, where one of the most earnest, bravest and most unselfish of martyrs of this labor laid down her life in the cause, the full fruits of the work are to be seen in companies of sober, honest, truthful, self-denying, obedient and thoroughly-instructed nurses—all of them intelligent, and many of them gently nurtured. Even now, in hospitals, poorhouses and asylums, wherever helpless poverty pleads for kinder treatment, and tender and more skillful care, the sick and suffering have learned to call their gentle ministrations blessed.—Baltimore Gazette.

AMERICAN LOCOMOTIVES.—The superiority of American locomotives is thus frankly confessed by the London Engineer, which, commenting on the unwillingness of British railroad men to adopt improvements, says: "It is beyond question, be the cause what it may, that the locomotive engines used in the United States cost less money and do more work than English locomotives. No English locomotive superintendent has ever proposed, however, to build an engine from Yankee patterns, and try it on an English line. The thing would be contrary, to all precedent, and therefore it is not done."

PRESERVE THEM.—"Many people take newspapers, but few preserve them, yet the most interesting reading imaginable, is an old file of newspapers. It brings up every age with its bustle and every day affairs, and marks its genius and its spirit more than the labored description of the historian. Who can take up a paper dated half a century ago, without the thought that almost every name there printed is now cut upon a tombstone at the head of an epoch? It is easy to preserve newspapers, and they will repay the trouble, for, like that of wine, their value increases with their years."
